Annual Conference of the Club of Rome 2011

New Delhi, 9-11 November 2011

“Economics, Ecology and Values – Where the World and India Meet”

With “Economics, Ecology and Values – Where the World and India Meet”, the Club of Rome provides a platform to highlight the interdependence among economy, nature and values – dimensions that have come to be seen as opposing each other – as the basis of creating a world that is more equitable, productive and peaceful. While global issues remain the primary focus of the Club of Rome, this conference also focuses on issues of interest to the host country within the wider world context, with a particular focus on the relationship between an India that appears to be moving rapidly forward and a world which seems to be caught up in the doldrums.

The Annual Conference will bring together the latest thinking on the “Green Economy” – how global, national and local economies can be made more sustainable – and the special, and often forgotten, role that ecosystems and biodiversity play in such an economy. It will highlight the special role that ecosystem services, such as climate regulation, maintenance of clean water and productive soils, and the provision of natural chemicals and medicines, play in our economies. Technologies inspired by nature, which hold great promise for redesigning our production systems to be more sustainable, will be a particular focus in these discussions.

The outcome of the Conference discussions will result in substantive conclusions of interest to policy makers, practitioners, academics and the public. It will also provide inputs to officials in both the public and private sectors, which will help them represent the needs of people, nature and the future at global conferences such as Rio+20, the United Nations Summit on Sustainable Development in 2012.

Dealing with Unprecedented Crises – and Designing Effective Solutions

The Problematique

Already within the first decade of the new Millennium, humankind finds itself confronted by an explosion of crises. Some of them diminish human wellbeing, others threaten our institutions, social systems and perhaps even our civilizations and still others endanger the very processes of nature that support life on Earth.

More than a billion people in our world live in extreme poverty and another two billion people are also more or less outside the global economy – the poverty crisis. They, and others, need hundreds of millions of jobs that are not being created – the unemployment crisis. The growth of human populations and the decline of land productivity are leading rapidly to a food security crisis. The breakdown of our financial systems is causing a global economic crisis. And the changes in climate, the accelerating extinction of species and the rapid depletion of our natural resources are leading to a massive environmental crisis.

Many of these seemingly separate crises are, in fact, driven by the same sets of root causes: narrow and short-term economic goals, reinforced by gross undervaluation of natural capital, driven by individualistic values that assume that the resource base is infinite and the capacity of nature to absorb wastes is unlimited. Furthermore, governance systems are not adequate.

The Resolutique

Likewise, the changes need to save civilization and life on Earth must be systemically designed to address these root causes together; anything less cannot produce a lasting solution to these deeply-set, seemingly intractable crises.

The Club of Rome firmly believes that humanity deserves a better future and such a future is possible, provided we understand the systemic issues that have led to the present and devise holistic solutions for the generations that will follow us.

What Sets the Club of Rome Apart

What distinguishes the Club of Rome from all the other excellent initiatives around the world to tackle the crises challenging us today is its insistence on dealing with emerging issues, the importance of which others have not yet fully recognized or appreciated, putting them in a new frame of thinking and looking at them from a perspective of fairness, resource impact and overall sustainability.

It is also distinguished by its insistence on considering real facts, going into the root, fundamental causes, identifying solutions that will work and packaging these in a manner that policy makers understand.

Its members are independent thought leaders, representing different perspectives based on a long-term vision, a holistic understanding of the relationship between people, society, resources and technology and dedicated to a better world for future generations.

In short, the Club's value proposition:

- Its focus – strategic, scientific and systemic; and
- Its approach – independent, inclusive and open-ended

Club of Rome: Its Past

Set up in 1968 as a global think-tank, the Club of Rome (CoR) has been a major force for advocating changes of policy, institutions, technologies and human affairs to ensure a fair and fulfilling future for all of humanity. Its focus has been on the social and environmental implications of current development models and on the instrumentalities needed to make these more positive for everyone, now and in the future.

The Club of Rome has inspired global thinkers about the importance of a deeper understanding of natural resources, institutions of governance and human values in designing a better form of socio-economic development through its reports. Its first Report, "Limits to Growth", published in 1972, caused a veritable intellectual explosion worldwide, and was the direct progenitor of the entire environmental movement that is now a major force in global policy and action. Since then, some 40 Reports have followed, including "The State of Oceans", "No Limits to Learning", "Factor 5" and "Blue Economy". Together, these have played a major role in defining the paradigm of sustainable development.

Economics, Ecology, Values - Where the World and India Meet

The aims of the meetings are to:

- Serve as a forum for exchange of the latest thinking on the numerous problematiques confronting nations and people today, and to explore strategic, scientific and systemic resolutiques for these within the broad framework provided by the nexus among the key dimensions of today's trilemma: Economics, Ecology and Value Systems.
- Launch the Indian National Association of the Club of Rome, and establish the new entity as a platform for Indian thought leaders to analyze the global situation from an Indian perspective. This platform will also serve as a forum for innovative thinking originating in India to be shared with partners overseas, both East and West. Its focus will particularly be on systemic linkages needed for promoting sustainable innovation in the fields of job creation, effective management of land, water, waste and energy, and research into effective models for creating environmentally sound and equitable economic development.
- Create a networking opportunity for leaders from India and abroad, to explore ideas around youth entrepreneurship, job creation, governance, food security and nature conservation.
